MY LIFE as a writer has largely been made possible by feminist and alternative presses and the feminist and independent bookstores. The first work I ever published was in a tiny feminist magazine. The first time I ever called myself a writer was when I read my stories in Herstore, a feminist bookstore I helped to found in Tallahassee, Florida. My first book of poetry was published by a small independent feminist press, and my short stories and essays continue to be available from Firebrand Books. Without the bookstores, magazines and presses that have encouraged and sustained my imagination I would not have known what to do with the stories I wanted to tell. At a time when the survival of the small independents is so uncertain, it is essential that we all do everything we can to make sure that these vital community institutions are there for everyone — writers and readers. We all need to encourage the spirit that sustains the people and organizations who have done so much for writers like myself by supporting writers and introducing readers to works that might otherwise go unheard and unread. Feminist and independent bookstores offer a home to the kind of work that shapes and sustains the best of our communities, and they deserve — need — your support. A list of the bookstores that made this catalog possible begins on page 32. Please shop at these bookstores, and your local independent bookstores. Order your books from them, refer your friends to them — help make sure that they're still here next year, and the next. It's important.

“Without the feminist and other independent bookstores, magazines and presses that have encouraged and sustained my imagination I would not have known what to do with the stories I wanted to tell.”

WORKING WITH EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE

DANIEL GOLEMAN, PH.D.

The author of the international bestseller Emotional Intelligence turns to the workplace and reveals that success in the workplace may require more emotional intelligence than IQ. Goleman analyzes both inner competencies and essential social strengths that can be learned, and creates a blueprint for the "emotionally intelligent organization" while offering solid examples from today's business world.

PRAYING WITH BODY AND SOUL: A Way to Intimacy with God

JANE E. VENNARD

Praying with body and soul involves the whole person: the senses, the body at rest or in motion, the imagination, as well as the mind and the emotions. This guide to prayer shows how, by paying prayerful attention to the body, people will recognize the ways in which they already pray and learn how to deepen their relationship with God.

SISTERS OF DUST, SISTERS OF SPIRIT: Womanist Wordings on God and Creation

KAREN BAKER-FLETCHER

Cultivating the ecological side of Black womanism, Karen Baker-Fletcher combines a keen awareness of environmental racism with reflection on her own journey and a constructive theological vision. "Our task is to grow large hearts, large minds, reconnecting with earth, Spirit, and one another. Black religion must grow ever deeper in the heart." —from the preface.

THE GODDESS IN THE GOSPELS: Reclaiming the Sacred Feminine

MARGARET STARBIRD

The author of the controversial The Woman with the Alabaster Jar takes us on her journey from orthodox daughter of the Catholic Church to modern-day heretic. As we follow Margaret Starbird's research into the scorned feminine in the Church's hierarchy, we recognize that her story is every woman's search for authenticity in our modern patriarchal culture.
